Significance and Objectives

Building service systems are essential elements in the design process, which in most cases have great impacts on architectural and structural designs.
In the current scenario of architectural designing, architects attempt to include the spatial requirements of the service systems and their components in the design process as early as possible.
The advent of technology into the construction can bring about the concept of futuristic architecture but the academicians and students are deprived of these advancements in services and construction.

This Teachers Training Program intends:

1. To understand the role of an architect in integrating knowledge of advanced services,green services and modern construction technologies with architectural design.
2. To develop a preparedness of students for parallel thinking of services, technology and design.
3. To elaborate upon some of the changing patterns in construction.
4. To create an awareness of R and D progressing towards Futuristic architecture.

Topics
1. Advanced Services for High Rise Structures
2. Challenges in Construction of High Rise Structures
3. Project Management of Tall & Supertall Buildings
4. Smart Building Techniques
5. Rethinking Spaces
6. Prototyping & Actualization in Futuristic Architecture
